

MR. CLAGETT BEGINS THE TALK.

Argument in the Kincaid Case Opened This Afternoon.

The closing arguments in the Kincaid trial were begun this afternoon. Mr. Claggett talked nearly an hour and a-half and then proceedings were suspended until tomorrow morning on account of the continued illness of Juror McClinton.

On the other hand, again at a check the jury in the box. The sick juror, Middleton, was concerned that he would not be able to provide for him with an erect thing over his shoulders. In response to questions by the court and counsel, the juror said he had an asthma grip, said he thought he could not stand. He said he had to take his medicine every three hours, and the next time for a dose would be in 15 minutes. He said he would not take "medicine" time came and then perhaps it would interrupt the proceedings briefly so that the jury could take a break.

MR. CLAGGETT'S ARGUMENT.

Mr. Claggett took his place before the jury open for the government. After referring to the gravity of the crime of murder, he summed up what he said were the almost admitted facts of the case. These were the shooting at a

The way that bullet entered the head proved conclusively that Donaldson was speaking the truth. He said that Taubee turned to see who fired the shot and that the bullet went into Kincaid's head above Taubee's back and Taubee's head was turned.

BLOOD ON THE STEPS.

He referred to Jones' testimony as corroborative of Donaldson's, and speaking of the blood that was on the steps he said: "I saw the conspired steps of the Capitol, where I saw the blood was spilt for revenge. He described Kincaid as smearing under the insult of the morning. He knew, he said, that 'a brother' newspaper was running out a story; that he would be pointed out to a man who was cowardly. He went to the Capitol, he said, and he saw the blood himself came back to the capitol and he saw him see Taubee go into the House. It was

If Jones testimony was believed, so little time elapsed after Jones passed Kincaid on the stage that it was impossible that what Kincaid described as having taken place could have taken place.

He referred to Taulieb's words after he "saw" Kincaid, "I saw him go by, and he said, 'or 'who did this?' to show that Taulieb was even then unconscious as to who his aggressor was, though Kincaid described Taulieb as being "in the act of striking" him.

He also pointed out the different circumstances under which Kincaid and Lovell testified and left it to the jury to determine which one would be likely to tell his testimony, which had interests to serve.

SAITS THE OFFENSE WAS MURDER.

He said that it was impossible for Donaldson and Lovell to have connected the same day, the living in Louisiana and one in Boston, and

No matter how sick he was, if so weak that he had to crawl to the steps and did crawl and staggered up the steps, he would be there.

At 2:30 o'clock the sick juror, Middleton took his medicine and said he was feeling better. The physician said, "as long as he could walk, he would be all right." He was not to be worried but that next and adjourned till morning.
